IV. WRITING (10 points)

In this letter I'll tell you a story about the most unusual day of my summer holidays.

This story was happened when I was in Tyumen with my family and grandparents. That day my father called me in the morning and said that we are going to go on fishing with me, him, my younger sister Kate and grandfather. I was so excited about it and picked all things for fishing in our car. After that we sat in the car and rode to the lake, but we didn't expect that in afternoon would be more windy so all fish in the lake went to the deep of it and we came home without fish and happiness.

From that story I got the lesson that you should plan fishing, cooking or something like that with information ^{about} plans for weather, how many tomato or cheese you have got in the fridge and etc.

Writing

Today, I want to discuss the quote of a writer - Stephen King that sounds like: "Talent is a deeper than table salt. What separates the talented individual from the successful one is a lot of hard work". I understand it like if you are not talent-gifted in some way you will still have an opportunity to gain success if you will work hard and that is the talent is worth less without working hard.

I can agree with this statement because almost everybody is not talented in everything but if they have eager to be the best in something they will get it by working straight for their goals.

To illustrate my opinion I want to give an example from literature. In Anton Chekhov story called "Chor and Kolnich" there is a villager named Chor whose house was burnt and he asked his owner to live separately on island in a swamp, so the owner gave him a chance and some time later there was a great and wealthy village on the swamps that a story-teller was impressed that not talented, but hard-working man did all of this and became wealthier than his owner.

In conclusion, as Stephen King said that even if you are talented or not you won't have success without great eager to labour for your talent will cost even less than simple table salt that everyone have in their houses.
